Introduction

The Seniors Independence Program (SIP), a major contributions funding program of the Department of National Health and Welfare, came into effect on April 1, 1988. The Program enables seniors, acting on their own behalf and in collaboration with others, to increase their independence and quality of life.

The involvement of seniors in decisions which affect them is one of the key principles of SIP. As well, the Program gives priority to those seniors most in need. Established priorities include senior women, seniors living in rural or remote areas, and seniors less advantaged due to life's circumstances. SIP stresses the importance of community development, community action and other participatory approaches to independence and quality of life. SIP projects also promote collaboration between the project sponsor and other community groups, establishing valuable partnerships. The Program contributes to the process of social change, and promotes and supports lifelong development and learning.

This book is the first report on SIP-funded projects approved between April 1, 1988, and March 31, 1990. On the following pages you will find information about the types of projects funded and their goals and activities. We hope this information will facilitate contact between the groups and individuals working with seniors and will illustrate the scope of SIP projects across the country.

Following this Introduction you will find a "Selected Project Hi-Lites" section containing detailed descriptions of six SIP projects. These projects have been highlighted because they illustrate characteristics important to the Program, such as strong senior involvement and community focus.

The book continues with project abstracts, listed by province and territory, containing details such as the names and locations of sponsors, the financial contribution and duration of the projects. The abstracts also summarize the projects' major goals and activities.

For easy reference, each province or territory's projects have been organized by categories: women; rural/remote; native/Inuit; ethno-cultural; Alzheimer's; elder abuse; disabled; drug, alcohol, medication awareness; caregiving; housing; self-help/mutual aid; education/awareness; and improved community resources.

The above categories are by no means mutually exclusive. Most projects could fall under several categories. For example, a project listed under 'Caregiving' could also be considered a women's project, since most of Canada's caregivers are women. Many projects that will benefit women have been placed under another heading, one which may more accurately reflect the type of activity being conducted.

The Seniors Independence Program funds national, regional, and local projects. Projects are developed through the regional offices of Social Service Programs and Health Promotion Programs. For information on application procedures, contact a Social Service Programs office. Addresses are listed on page 105.

For more information about any of the projects described in this report, please contact the project sponsor or the Social Service Programs office in that province.

Care for the Caregiver: Project on Education and Support for Informal Caregivers to the Elderly

4687-02-88/001

Mount Saint Vincent University
166 Bedford Highway
Halifax, N.S. B3M 2J6

Tel: (902) 443-4450

Caring for an elderly family member can be extremely difficult. Indeed, the demands are sometimes so great that caregivers become resentful and in turn begin to neglect, or even abuse, the elderly relative. Frequently, they must resort to institutions to provide care.

Until recently, few resources have been available to caregivers. But now in Nova Scotia, an innovative project is providing psychological support for caregivers (most of whom are senior women) as well as solutions to some of their problems.

The project, "Care for the Caregiver," is the brainchild of Dr. Mary O'Brien, of Mount Saint Vincent University's Gerontology Department. It has planned a number of workshops in Halifax-Dartmouth, Truro, North Sydney, and Yarmouth. The workshops will offer practical information on subjects such as the aging process, the stresses of caregiving, death and dying, and legal matters. They will also provide caregivers with an opportunity to discuss their problems in an understanding setting.

Results so far suggest that the project has been highly successful. Demand for the 15-person workshops has been so great that one session scheduled for September 1990 was booked before the end of March. Best of all, workshop groups are staying together, continuing to lend peer support to family caregivers.

The workshops are just one aspect of the project's broad-based support for family caregivers. Some participants have been talking to community groups, telling seniors and others about the program. A resource centre for caregivers, containing books and other materials, will be set up in Halifax in connection with Mount Saint Vincent's Gerontology Department. This centre is designed to provide support for all people caring for the elderly in their homes.

The project has not neglected Nova Scotia's rural areas. While the emphasis has been on urban centres (particularly Halifax-Dartmouth), workshops will be held elsewhere. In September 1990, there will be a peer-counsellor training program. This program will train counsellors to provide one-on-one support to family caregivers and to plan and facilitate workshops.

Seniors will continue to be involved in the running of workshops and operation of the project. The director is a senior, and the advisory committee, which oversees all facets of the project, consists primarily of seniors.

As the workshop technique is perfected, the project will develop a "how to" manual designed to show family caregivers and professionals elsewhere in Canada how to set up a similar program. A highlight of the project's final year will be a conference for professional caregivers, where skills and techniques needed for implementing this program will be shared.

Clearly, "Care for the Caregiver" is an idea whose time has come.

Action Seniors 1989

(Action 3<sup>e</sup> âge 1989)

A growing elderly population and the exodus of youth to urban centres constitute an increasing problem in Quebec municipalities. Feelings of isolation affect a large portion of the population. A lack of support services, particularly for seniors living in the Transcontinental, the southwest sector of the region of Témiscouata, contributes further to this isolation.

More older people could live independently in their own homes if they could count on homemaking support, transportation, and easily accessible information. Such resources would allow them to perform their daily tasks without worry.

To help seniors overcome their isolation, a group of older citizens has initiated a self-help network. Homemaking service committees have been organized and publicized in the ten communities of the region. Through these committees, members are available to refer seniors to appropriate resources.

The isolation of the Transcontinental community is intensified by inadequate public transportation and taxi service. Many seniors must travel 100 km to the nearest hospital. This study, through a series of consultations between volunteers and seniors, will assess transportation needs and priorities.

The third objective of the project is to disseminate information about health care. To this end, seniors have established an "info-mobile" service, which will travel throughout the communities of the Témiscouata region. Advice concerning health and health-related issues identified as priorities will be available on audio-cassette on request.

Specially trained community volunteers will keep information up-to-date and ensure the continuation of the home-consulting service and the liaison between the demand and the provision of services.

Clearly, "Action 3<sup>e</sup> âge du Transcontinental" not only fills an important need in the community, it also involves seniors in improving the quality of their lives and enhancing the knowledge of available resources.

For Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow

4687-05-88/024

Federation of Italian Canadian Seniors
901 Lawrence Avenue West, #305
Toronto, Ont. M6A 1C3

Tel: (416) 787-4340

Many of Toronto's Italian seniors, particularly women, are isolated from the community. With little or no knowledge of English, they are sometimes afraid to travel by bus or subway and frequently do not make use of available services such as health and dental care, home care support, and assistance in obtaining pensions from overseas.

Senior Italian women are sometimes isolated even within their own families because their children and grandchildren may know little or no Italian. This double isolation – from family and from the larger community – makes the situation of senior Italian women especially difficult.

To help alleviate this problem, the Federation of Italian Canadian Seniors has mounted a project designed to use the extensive network of Italian social clubs to encourage senior Italian women to become more involved in the community. Trained workers are reaching out to social and recreational clubs, churches, and other organizations specifically to encourage women to become more active in these organizations.

A volunteer committee made up of Italian seniors has begun to produce and distribute a newsletter, written in simple Italian, which provides information about existing community resources.

The project will also develop self-help manuals and videos focusing on leadership and organizational skills. To promote ongoing activity once the project's funding ceases, the outreach workers will train senior volunteers to take over most of their duties.

So far, results have been gratifying. In addition to receiving favourable coverage in both the Italian and English press in Toronto, the project has begun to make a difference in the lives of Italian senior women. Support from the Federation's 50 member clubs has been strong, and women have begun to play a larger role in the activities of those clubs. As of April 1990, women were members of 19 clubs, as compared to 12 in October 1989. These women are increasingly serving on the clubs' boards of directors or activity committees, rather than simply providing support service (knitting, crocheting, or fund-raising) as they did typically in the past.

With each Federation club maintaining a membership of 350 to 400, the project can potentially reach thousands of Italian seniors.

In the long term, this project, which makes imaginative use of existing community organizations, should go a long way toward bridging the gap between the needs of these seniors and the services available to them.

Support Groups for Older Farm Women in Saskatchewan

Women's Inter-Church Council of Canada

Saskatoon, Sask. S7N 1Y7

After January 1991:

Women's Inter-Church Council of Canada
77 Charles Street
Toronto, Ont. M5S 1K5
(416) 922-6177

The life of a farm woman has never been easy. Economic uncertainty, worries about the weather, long working hours and isolation "come with the territory."

Farm women have been under even greater stress in recent years as a farm crisis which began in the late 1980s continues to put many farmers out of business and push others to the brink of bankruptcy. To save their homes and their way of life, many women have sought work off the farm. Not only has this situation led to increased family problems, but spousal abuse and alcoholism appears to be increasing as the farm crisis deepens.

For senior farm women, the situation may be even worse. While many must work to supplement sharply reduced family incomes, few have marketable skills. Those who do venture into the labour market frequently find themselves bypassed in favour of younger women. Their pensions also tend to be low or non-existent. Making matters worse, tradition prohibits these women from talking about their problems; thus, many feel they have no sympathetic individual or group to turn to.

Long concerned about the plight of Saskatchewan's senior farm women, the Women's Inter-Church Council (WICC) has launched a project designed to establish support groups where these women can talk freely about their problems and explore possible solutions. Another major aim is to develop resources, such as a handbook and a video, which can be used by these women and by community groups in Saskatchewan and elsewhere in Canada.

The project, which is managed by an advisory committee of senior women, has mounted an intensive outreach effort in Saskatchewan's rural communities. By summer 1990, an organizer had already visited more than 70 communities, meeting with individual farm women and groups.

A number of approaches, including drawing and storytelling, have been used to encourage women to talk about issues and problems affecting them. Another method used has been role playing, in which participants act out the different ways they would expect a support group to help.

The response to the visits has been positive. Whereas at first the organizer spent much of her time meeting small groups around kitchen tables, she now also addresses larger bodies, such as church conventions and synods. In addition, a number of support groups have started up as a direct result of the project's outreach efforts.

The project's handbook, a collection of stories about the situation of older farm women, which also illustrates how farm women have used support groups, has been completed. And a video based on the life of an actual senior farm woman will be filmed in the rural Saskatchewan town of Outlook.

The national WICC organization will distribute the handbook and video nation-wide. As well, the National Farmers' Union and many churches have indicated that they would like to start sponsoring support groups of their own.

In reaching out to community groups as diverse as quilting clubs and church synods, the project has brought new hope to Saskatchewan's senior farm women.

Amount: $79,000. Duration: 15 months.

The Vancouver Volunteer Centre's Senior Talent Bank

4687-09-88/037

The Vancouver Volunteer Centre
301-3102 Main Street
Vancouver, B.C. V5T 3C7

Tel.: (604) 875-9144

For volunteer placement agencies, seniors are a potentially valuable resource. And yet, few volunteer recruitment programs have effectively tapped this potential. But now, as one seniors group is discovering, flexibility in programming may be the solution to this dilemma.

Experience has shown that seniors perceive non-profit agencies to be inflexible in terms of setting volunteer-hours and unwilling to provide short-term (six-month or less) placements which would enable seniors to travel or to spend time with their families and still be of service to their communities.

To attract more senior volunteers, the Vancouver Volunteer Centre is developing the Senior Talent Bank to match prospective volunteers with social, cultural and recreational organizations and other non-profit agencies in the community. Accordingly, information about a prospective senior's availability and preferred type of work is entered into a computer and matched with information on available volunteer opportunities. When a good fit seems possible between an agency and a volunteer, the Volunteer Centre attempts to bring them together.

Senior talent banks have been operating successfully in several Ontario communities and in the United States for some time. Unique to the Vancouver Centre's project, however, is the wide range of volunteer work available, including opportunities in hospitals and social service agencies, theatre companies, environmental groups and groups working with animals. Within seniors agencies themselves, there are a great many possibilities. Some need people to research and write their histories, others need reporters for their newsletters. Volunteers are also needed to serve on boards of directors.

An important feature of this project is the extent to which seniors have been involved in developing the talent bank. Already the core group of seniors comprising the project's Advisory Committee has made presentations to about 20 seniors groups in Vancouver. As a result of these presentations, a number of seniors have registered for the talent bank and some have already been placed with non-profit agencies.

The Advisory Committee will plan a media strategy to ensure that the talent bank is well publicized throughout Greater Vancouver. Later, the project will expand its outreach efforts to include participation in pre-retirement seminars run by the private sector. There are plans to produce a "how-to" manual and to take the idea of the Senior Talent Bank to other parts of the province, particularly rural areas. A long-term aim is to make the project self-supporting by training senior volunteers to take over most aspects of program delivery.

By involving more seniors as volunteers, the Vancouver Senior Talent Bank will benefit the volunteers themselves as well as the agencies they serve and the larger community.

Amount: $174,509. Duration: 36 months.

Keeping Canadians on Their Feet

4687-15-88/002

Victorian Order of Nurses

5 Blackburn Avenue

Ottawa, Ont. K1N 8A2

Tel.: (613) 233-5694.

Poor foot care causes problems for many seniors, frequently leaving them unable to get around. It has been estimated that 15 to 20 percent of Canadians over 65 who live at home need professional foot care. Most either don't know how to care for their feet or are prevented from caring properly because of poor eyesight or lack of flexibility.

The Victorian Order of Nurses (VON) began operating foot care clinics in 1978; today over two thirds of its branches provide this service. The demand has become so great, in fact, that the VON has realized it simply doesn't have the resources to run the clinics on its own.

"Keeping Canadians on Their Feet" is a project designed to meet those needs by forging partnerships between the VON and seniors organizations interested in sponsoring foot care clinics. The VON helps the sponsoring organization set up the service and provides the specially trained nurses.

The sponsoring group manages the project, deciding when, where and how often the clinic is offered. Volunteers from the sponsoring group perform all tasks, other than direct provision of care, including reception, record keeping, statistics collection, and care and preparation of medical instruments.

Most seniors visit the clinics for routine toenail care or to have corns and calluses removed or reduced. They are taught to care for their feet when possible, and to distinguish between conditions they can manage and those that require professional attention.

Referrals to a chiropodist or podiatrist may be made through the clinic.

As foot care clinics are not covered by provincial health care plans and the project is designed to operate on a cost-recovery basis, many (though not all) VON branches charge a fee for the clinics. While it is up to individual branches to decide how much to charge, fees usually range from $5 to $18. Although the clinics are not restricted to seniors, most clients – an estimated 90 percent – are over 55.

Recruiting sponsoring groups to manage the clinics and training nurses to provide foot care are the project's two principal activities. VON nurses trained in advanced foot care usually serve as instructors to other VON nurses. In areas such as Prince Edward Island and the Northwest Territories, where there are no VON branches, however, the instructor trains provincial or public health nurses.

In its search for sponsoring groups, the VON has mounted a massive – and innovative – outreach effort across Canada. Recognizing the need for varying approaches throughout the regions, the VON has tailored its sponsorship campaign to fit local conditions. The clinics' locations are equally varied, ranging from community centres to church basements.

There is no doubt that these foot care clinics are providing a lot of foot care to people who need it. "Keeping Canadians on Their Feet" is a creative and far-reaching attempt to address a health problem affecting large numbers of Canada's seniors.
